Mrs. and Misses Boardman have spent the summer at Etretat, which, as every-body knows, is a charming little watering place on the coast of France, much affected by artists. In half of the fashionable by artists. In half of the fashlonable drawing-rooms of the world are little corners of this quaint old-world resort painted by some celebrated artist. The Misses Boardman thoroughly explored the country around Etretat on their wheels. The climate there is delightful, the hard white roads seem to have been made for wheeling, and these enterprising young women count this summer one of the most delightful and satisfactory they have ever lightful and satisfactory they have eve

This is a queer world. I spent the night with a friend of mine, who lives in one of the suburbs recently, and was persuaded by her to attend a meeting of a literary circle, much against my will, however, for the discussion set for that evening was the "New Woman," and that subject tries my nerves. But I was repaid by a delicious bit of comedy, which I am generous enough to want others to enjoy.

At a recent salcoftheeffects of a departing diplomat one of the purchasers bought a small piece of silver, under the impression that it was solid. She returned shortly with her purchase and a grievance, saying that it was only plated. The diplomat himself, who seemed to have the sale in charge, admitted that it was only plated.

"But, my dear madame," he said, "li is very valuable for its age and unique design. It has been in my family for centuries and centuries." to want others to enjoy.

There is a bonnely, cross-grained, dyspeptic old bachelor, Mr. Peter Chagrin, who lives near my friend. He has a good farm and an excellent income, but he is personally so repulsive that these material advantages have never tempted any of the property young women classics. centuries."
"That is all very well," said the unappreciative Philistine, "but I don't want it," and she restored her parchase and received hermoney. But a young woman in the background, who dearly loves a "lord," bought the despised piece of plated ware at a handsome price, and now treasures as a priceless possession the sugar bowl, teapot, or whatever it is, which was bought at one of the town abous for a mere song by the butler. nemerous young women who live in the vicinity—and he has proposed to every one of them—to share their lot with his imagine the amusement of these fair damsels, who had not once, but many times, given him the mitten, when this worthy concluded again, were said-antiting to the town shops for a mere song by the butler of the thrifty diplomat. concluded some very side-splitting re-marks about the "new woman" by say-ing: "And now, ladies and gentlemen, you have doubtless, many of you, wondered why I, Peter Chagrin, with property and a home to offer the woman of my choice, have never married. It is the new woman, the new woman"—here he became very That old, moss-covered joke about the lapsus linguae has served many turns. My estectmed contemporary, "Bab," served it up the other day with a new and piquant sauce, but this is a true story. A Washington woman, who received from her papa in law—a dear and devoted old gentleman—a present of a five-figured check with which to make an addition to her tewery box went into a shoon many, many the new woman"-here he became very excited and almost screamed-"the new woman, I say, who is responsible for my unhappy state—a lonesome and unloved old bachelor." And as we walked home to-gether, my friend and I, we concluded that jewelry box, went into a shop many, many miles away from the Capital and asked to look p some gems. Among other things she shown a beautiful necklace of he new woman was to be congratulated for "It is very, very lovely," she said, and baving es-aped Mr. Peter Chagrin, if for the name of the stone not occurring to her on the instant, "but what is it?"
"Lapsus linguae," responded the atten-tive clerk; "said to have belonged to Catherine of Russia, known as Catherine the Good."

Miss Lilly Allward Moss, and Hon, Joseph H. Sweney were married yesterday afternoon at 5 o'clock at the residence of the bride's mother. Mrs. Annie Moss, No. 2020 I street northwest. The pretty drawing-room was exquisitely decorated with palms, ferns, and white chrysanthemums, the bay window being screened with palms which formed a bower, in which the ceremony was solemnized. Rev. John Chester. cousin of the bride, officiated, and the music of the wedding march was readered by Prof. Harry Sherman, a friend of the family.

Lieut. Wright, U. S. A., of Fort Myer, acted as best man, and ex-Gov. Alexander Shenherd exercises and the agent. The wedding gown was of pearl-white faille, trimmed with pearl possementerie, and the bridal bouquet was of lilles of the valley.

A reception followed the marriage, at which forty friends were present, and a delicious collation was served in the dining-room, where the decorations were of La France, roses, and the candelabra caps shaded with pink.

Mr. and Mrs. Swency left for a short trip, and will return in a few weeks to visit Mrs. A. Moss, going later to their lowa home. The bride wore a going-away gown of plumb colored cloth, with Lat of velvet the same shade, and never looked prettier than when escaping blushing and smiling through the shower of rice thrown by her young friends as she left her home for the carriage. Mr. Swency is an ex-Congressman and a noted lawyer of lowa. They will reside at Grage, Ia. The gifts were handsome and numerous.

The Whitney-Paget wedding, which so far has been overshadowed by the Vander-bilt-Marthorough auptials, is now a matter of absorbing interest, both here and in New York. Miss Pauline Whitney and Mr. Almeric Hugh Paget will be married on Tuesday next, and the ceremony vill also take place in St. Thomas Church. Miss I mily Vanderbilt Sloane, and Miss Gertrude Vanderbilt, two cousins of the Duchess of Yarl-borough, who were not even invited to her wedding, will be bridesmaids, also Miss Beatrice Bend, Miss Barney, Miss Brown, and Miss Dimock. This hevy of beautiful girls will wear gowns of light blue, rose and yellow peau de sole, with dainty Tam o'Shanter hats to match, made of velvet, looped coquettistly with sable and decorated on the crowns with brilliants. Instead of bouquets they will carry French muffs of velvet, trimmed with sable and frilled with lace. The bridal gown will be of conventional white with sable and trilled with tace.
